BUTLER'S STORE WELL STOCKED FOR EASTERTIDE

The Road to Credit Is Open To Bridgeporters, Via This Store.

Butler's clothing store at 1117 Main street, "where credit equals cash" is displaying special Easter offerings in their out of the ordinary spring styles for men, women and children.

This comfortable and convenient branch of the chain of 22 stores operated by H. H. Butler under the management of N. Olshan, is probably one of the best equipped credit clothing establishments in New England, with an opportunity of getting advance and fashionable styles at prices that can offer them to patrons on credit terms as low as the usual cash displays.

Their fitting-rooms are replete at this time with well filled racks containing the latest fashions made up into suits for men and women, and the additional paraphernalia that goes to make up the well-dressed man, woman or child is there to-day.

Women's suits, coats, and hats, men's suits, top-coats, hats, boys' suits and girls' suits may here be found for the Easter wearing in all varieties of material and styles. The road to credit is but a few steps above the street.

BRICKLAYER DIES BY HIS OWN HAND

After a debauch of a few days, Archibald MacCrimmon, a bricklayer, committed suicide by slashing his throat with a razor at his boarding house, 763 Maple street, yesterday afternoon.

MacCrimmon had been acting in a queer manner and Mrs. John Healy, boarding mistress, became alarmed. She called in John Connors, a friend of MacCrimmon, and asked him to watch the boarder in his room. Connors sat in the kitchen of the boarding house while MacCrimmon entered his bedroom. He had just taken some medicine prescribed by a physician.

Connors later entered MacCrimmon's room and found him lying on the floor with blood streaming from his throat and a razor in his hand. He had severed three arteries in his throat and had died almost instantly.

Medical Examiner S. M. Garlick reported intentional suicide.

Archibald MacCrimmon was well known in East Bridgeport. He was an expert bricklayer in the employ of the Parly Construction Co., and was employed on the construction work at the Union Metallic Cartridge Co. He was a member of the local bricklayers' union.

NEW YORK POLICE PLACE SMALL FAITH IN NEW CLUES IN STRANGE CASE OF MISSING DOROTHY ARNOLD

Officials Are Investigating Story of Rhode Island Convict But Neither They Nor Family of Lost Girl Are Depending Upon Glennorris' Tale.

Inspector Faurot has begun an investigation of the tale of the death and burial of Dorothy Arnold, the girl who disappeared from her home at 188 East Seventy-ninth street on Dec. 12, 1914, told by Edward C. Glennorris, an inmate of the Rhode Island State Prison.

"If this man Glennorris has told the story of the murder and burial of Dorothy Arnold," said John S. Keith, attorney for Francis R. Arnold, the girl's father, "it is a question not only the tale that he tells but the motive he has in telling it."

"It looks very like a good move to have himself taken from the Rhode Island State Prison to New York presumably to show this place of burial in West Point for the simple purpose of fighting afterward against extradition to the State where he is now a prisoner."

"If he persuaded the authorities to bring him to this State to locate that house he could put up the defence against extradition that he never fled from justice. I know of no law to stop him, nor any law that would bring him back."

"But I've never seen the man and I can't size him up until I do. So far I have received no word from any official source that he has even told the story—which is founded on several illogical things."

"In the first place I put no faith in the story because, even if he did take part in some work, Miss Arnold was above reproach and beyond the danger of death in the way his tale insinuates."

"He said that they took the girl from New Rochelle to West Point. What would be the need of carrying her so far? It seems ridiculous to me. Then he said that he was brought from New York the day after his first trip in the auto, to dig the grave. When he reached West Point he found the grave already dug. Why would he be called to do a job already completed?"

"We will do nothing until officially asked about it. That the belief of the Providence police in the tale is not strong is evident, it strikes me, from the fact that they are so slow in reporting any belief at all to the New York police or to us."

The police were looking for a report from the Providence authorities on the alleged confession, made first about two weeks ago.

Glennorris persists in his tale, saying that he was informed by the men who hired him that the girl was Dorothy Arnold. He said that he recognized her features afterwards from pictures printed in the newspapers.

Early in 1911, while the police were still delving into the mystery of Miss Arnold's disappearance, Glennorris said he was asked to take in hand a "clinch" job by "Little Louis" Benoit, met a "rich young fellow" and went with them and the girl, who was unconscious, from a house in New Rochelle.

Reaching a house at a fork in a road near West Point they carried the girl inside, laid her on a couch and left her in the care of the wealthy man. With them was another man called "Doc." He returned to New York with Benoit and Glennorris.

The next day, the prisoner said, "Little Louis" came to him and said the girl had died. He was persuaded to accompany him to West Point to bury the body. There in the same house he found that a man named "Deponce" had started the grave by removing the concrete from the floor of the cellar. They brought the girl's body wrapped in a sheet, to the cellar, where they dug the grave and buried her. New concrete flooring was made to hide their work.

Glennorris said he received in all about $250, the last instalment being given to him by the "rich young fellow," whom he met in 1913 in a cabaret on Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn.

Inspector Cray of the Detective Bureau has verified Glennorris' statements so far as they refer to his haunts and acquaintances in New York. He learned that, as the prisoner said, he was to be found frequently in saloons on Seventh avenue near Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth streets and that he was acquainted with a girl named "Flo," who, the convict declared, had informed him that her friend, Benoit, wanted to see him about the "clinch" job.

But nothing, so far as the police of New York have been told, has been divulged that would tend to show that the girl buried, if such a thing occurred, was actually Dorothy Arnold.

Greater Efforts Required of French War Workers, Says Munitions Minister

Paris, April 18.—A warning that France must make still greater efforts was given by Albert Thomas, the munitions minister, in an address at the Creusot Works. M. Thomas praised the efforts of the workers and continued:

"But these efforts, great as they are, are still insufficient. The enemy had a considerable advantage over us, which we perhaps have not yet regained. Certainly our armies, thanks to you, are today well provided with munitions; but you know how the enemy, with his methodical, disciplined organization, has constantly increased his strength.

"It is your task to continue, to surpass our production and with the help of our allies to equal the effect of the menacing sleepless enemy."

The Treasury Department has increased its premium on war risk insurance to England from 1 1/2 to 2 per cent.

ANNIVERSARIES OF RING BATTLES

1904—Stanley Ketchel and Rudolph Hinz fought 20-round draw at Miles City, Mont. At that period of his career Ketchel, a kid of seventeen, was a Jack of all trades in Montana, and fighting was only one of his many side lines. He had never had any instruction in the art of boxing, and all he knew he had picked up for himself. In Hinz he met a full-fledged heavyweight, for Rudolph was a burly miner who outweighed the "Ketchel kid" by nearly fifty pounds. In spite of this great disparity in weight, and Ketchel's extreme youth and inexperience, he held the big fellow to a draw in a terrific slugging contest that went 20 rounds. Ketchel remained in Montana two years after that, and fought all the best men in that section, regardless of weight, height or experience. In all that period he was defeated only by Maurice Thompson, and of the thirty-five bouts he fought in Montana as a boy, he won all but four by knockouts. Ketchel weighed only 140 pounds when he fought Hinz, but he soon took on weight and was a middleweight when he went to California to begin his career in earnest.

D. A. R. BALLOTING FOR MINOR OFFICERS

Washington, April 19.—Daughters of the American Revolution, in annual session here, were balloting today for the election of officers other than president-general. Officers to be chosen were a corresponding secretary, 10 vice-presidents-general, an honorary vice-president-general and an editor of the D. A. R. publication.

Nomination of candidates were made last night. The result of balloting probably will not be announced until late today or tomorrow.
